Feel free to submit your questions or comments via chat here or via Twitter with #orlp

from Karen Smith-Yoshimura:

Do any of you participants have a research data support group like Cornell?

from Rachel Proudfoot:

Question for Wendy: what level of staffing do you have for the Research Data Management Service Group?

from Vika Zafrin:

I'd love to hear more about staffing (specifically, FTE for both on the ground and managerial staff) from both speakers.

from Melissa Renspie:

i would imagine that user surveys were done to assess the types of data being generated as well as needs for sharing/re-use... could the speaker talk about this?

from Stephanie Wright:

UW has a Data Services Team. Composed of 8 other lib staff members from different areas of the Libs plus our Data Services Communication & Curriculum Lib'n and myself, the Data Services Coordinator.

from Karen Smith-Yoshimura

That is, University of Washington

from Roy Tennant:

FAST headings are from us, actually: <http://www.oclc.org/research/activities/fast.html>

from Brian:

Sorry, what are FAST headings?

from Brian:

And can she provide a link to the vocabularies?

from Jennifer Liss:

About FAST: <http://www.oclc.org/research/activities/fast.html>
Search the vocabulary: <http://fast.oclc.org/searchfast/>

from Katherine McNeill:

Is Datastar still a staging repository (for storing/working with data-in-process)? That's a kind of system that many of us would find valuable but lack.

from Nancy Elkington:

Where are "cited" items drawn from?

from Grant Denkinson:

Need to head to meeting I can't rearrange. Good stuff and I look forward to catching up on the rest from the recording. Thanks all.

from CB:

What was the Oxford vocabulary URL? I didn't click fast enough to record it. Thanks.

from Stephen Hearn:

Is either project asking for or encouraging scholars to get scholar IDs (e.g., ORCID)? Didn't see a place for that in the input screens.

from Nancy Elkington:

Also must head to another webinar. Looking forward to hearing any final comments or discussion among the participants. Well done!

from Stephen Hearn:

Do the libraries have any involvement in encouraging best practices for data apparatus (codebooks, data dictionaries, etc.)?
