Immigrants

People came from all over the world to mine for gold in the American West. The migration from the east coast out to California in 1849 was one of the largest mass migrations in American history in which American migrants were joined by hopeful miners from Asia, Europe, Africa, and South America as word of gold spread. The location of gold deposits on the west coast particularly spurred large waves of Asian immigration, especially from China and the Philippines. Multiple communities based on shared national origin and culture developed around gold strikes.

But the west coast's huge variety of ethnicities did not mean it was free of the prejudices that dictated life in the rest of the country. Immigrants were second-class citizens at best—and that was a status reserved for those who looked and spoke as much like white American-born citizens as possible. Asian and South American immigrants, as well as those Spanish-speaking Californios who had lived in the area since before California belonged to the United States, were relegated to the lowest classes of society. White men often superseded claims they made upon gold deposits, for even if the immigrant had discovered the gold first the white man had the weight of the law behind him. Violence was endemic to the mining communities, and more often than not was directed at racial minorities by white men, and assault was seen

EBSCO Discovery Service and DPLA Highlights

The screenshot shows the EBSCO Discovery Service search results page. The search term 'windmills' is entered in the search bar. The results are displayed in a list format. The first result is a periodical article titled 'U/Pb geochronology and geochemistry of the bedrocks and moraine sediments from the Windmill Islands; implications for Proterozoic evolution of East Antarctica' by Zhang Shuanhong. The second result is an academic article titled 'Research on windmill starting characteristics of MTE-D micro turbine engine' by Xia, C.; Fu, X.; Wan, Z.; Huang, G.; Chen, J.. The page includes a 'Refine Search' sidebar on the left with filters for 'Source Types' (Academic Journals) and 'Publication Date' (1799 to 2014). The right sidebar shows 'Related Images' and 'Digital Public Library of America' resources, including 'Landscape with Windmills', 'Windmills: a book of fables', 'Improvement in Windmills', and 'Wind power and windmills'.

EBSCO Discovery Service brings together the most comprehensive collection of content—including superior indexing from top subject indexes, high-end full text and the entire library collection—all within an unparalleled full-featured, customizable discovery layer experience. Now you can also highlight the Digital Public Library of America (DPLA) rich resources from institutions around the US by including content from the DPLA in the form of a Widget on the right side of the screen.
